Curtis Marvin Hohn

*This scholarship is given in honor of the life and work of Curtis M. Hohn.
South Dakota state water policy leader, public servant, and community activist*

Curt Hohn was one of a family of 12 children raised on a farm near Plankinton, SD, and a 1972 graduate of Northern State College. He served on the staff of U.S. Senator George McGovern from 1972-74, and executive director of United Family Farmers from 1975-76. As manager of the Oahe Conservancy Subdistrict from 1977-1982, Curt played a leading role in the review of the Oahe Irrigation Project and legislative settlement for alternate water projects. Curt led the negotiations for the local Oahe Sub District with Congress and the US Department of Interior. The replacement of the Oahe Irrigation Project by the WEB domestic water pipeline was a transformative change in state and federal water policy for South Dakota.

As manager of the WEB Project from 1983-1987, Curt coordinated legislative authorization, funding and construction of the $100 million WEB Rural Water Project, the first major pipeline project to use Missouri River water in South Dakota. Curt's legacy as "the young defector" is chronicled in Uphill Against Water (the Great Dakota Water War) by author Peter Carrels. Oahe's story examined the conflict between the power of government and ordinary citizens. Hohn helped marshal "a coalition of farmers and environmentalists attempting to protect the land they lived on, farmed and loved." (Ed Marston, High Country News, 1999).

Curt was the Democratic candidate for the United States Congress in 2000. Although not elected, he continued to serve South Dakota by seeking resolutions to issues that impacted the public interest. During his last years, Curt led citizen intervention in the South Dakota Public Utilities Commission hearings regarding the Trans-Canada Crude Oil Pipeline.

Curt was an avid reader of history. His lifetime commitment of political courage and public service are reflected in the words of Robert F. Kennedy a man Curt deeply admired & often quoted—

"Few will have the greatness to bend history itself; but each of us can work to change a small portion of events, and in the total of all those acts will be written the history of this generation."
